This is PERFECTION OIL HEATER WEEK

Look for this round poster in your dealer's window

DURING the week of October 13-20, dealers everywhere are holding special displays and demonstrations of Perfection Oil Heaters. Visit your dealer and see for yourself how simple the Perfection is to operate—how it burns for 10 hours on a single gallon of oil—how it lights and gives full heat instantly and turns out without smoking.

It will pay for itself this fall alone by enabling you to keep warm without lighting the furnace.

During the long winter it will heat up the chilly corners your furnace doesn't reach. It is good for years to come—a real economy as well as a never-ceasing, cold-weather comfort.

Easily carried from place to place, smokeless, odorless and absolutely safe. You can't turn the wick too high.

Now is the time to buy your Perfection Oil Heater.

There are designs for every taste, inexpensive models as well as those of more elaborate finish.

Temperament and Ted

By VINCENT G. PERRY

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Ted was a wonder. Every man, woman and child on the Merlight "lot," as the big film studio was called, admitted it; every film fan in America proclaimed it from the "housetops." It wasn't just Ned's acting that was the cause of all the wonderment at the Merlight—it was Ted's defiance of temperament.

Why, actors and actresses who were not half so famous as Ted Leonard were allowed to have their days and even weeks of temperament "flings," but Ted worked right through without one in two years, and he worked twice as strenuously as any of the other actors, at that.

Ted wasn't one of the "bold men" type or film actors, either—he was a typical matinee idol in everything but disposition and nerve control.

Director Bob Lasbrook was the only one who didn't comment much on Ted's wonderful fortitude. Lasbrook had been in the film business since its infancy and before that he had had a long stage experience. "He is going to come down with a crash some of these days," Lasbrook murmured to himself one day. "I never saw the man with the true dramatic spirit who didn't have the temperament bug, too, and Ted sure has the dramatic spirit and then some. When the crash does come, look out!"

The crash did come. It was all because of the new leading lady. From the day of his first early success Ted had been starred alone, but now for some unexplained reason the directors of the company decided upon a co-star for him—a famous stage actress who was to make her film debut.

Ted knew what most of the stage actresses who sought the movies were like. He had seen them come up one by one and go down in formation of fours and fives. They didn't take. The movies were meant for young actresses, not for made-up has-beens. The camera brought out the lines and crowsfeet the footlights and grease paint hid! No stage actress was going to be exploited on his fame, no siree!

Bob Lasbrook was not surprised. The calm of the old director had more to do with Ted's final breaking up of temper than anything else. After Ted had waxed hot, shaken his fist and resorted to mild profanity old Bob just shook his head. Ted left that night for parts unknown. "To blazes with my contract," Ted had flung back at the business manager of the company as he sailed through the office, head held high. "Marie Sivelle can star alone. I hope her face breaks the camera!" He closed the door without noticing that the business manager had been talking to someone very small and sweet, someone who had risen and was blushing profusely.

The temperamental crash, as old Bob would have called it, had a firm grip on Ted for three days. At the end of the third day he began to think reasonably. It all came from not taking a vacation for so long, he told himself. The country was the place for him—the country he had left so few years before. How changed it would be now.

But the country was not much changed, he found. There was a feeling of gratification in bringing his roadster to a halt in front of the little schoolhouse where he had learned his A B C's. That sentiment was not the one that had brought him there first, though. The pleasant memory of the little teacher who had taught there the last year he had been in the village had never really left him, but now it had come back with great force. He had thought then that their friendship would have developed to something more than memories, but for some unexplained reason it hadn't. It was all his fault, the fault of his success, he told himself reproachfully. Would she remember? Would she look the same?

Wonder of wonders, she had not changed a bit. The school door had opened and she was coming down the path to the road. Ted was out of the car and running down the path to meet her. Did she remember? The glad little cry of recognition and the eyes filled with tears of joy said more than all the words in the world. He almost had her in his arms when he remembered.

It was a wonderful week that followed. Just the sort of week that was needed to restore Ted's nerves. With the return of all his practical judgment, Ted began to analyze his feelings. He loved this little teacher, this Nora Givens. She was the sweetest little woman in the world and he was going to make her his wife, he told himself.

Just as he had made firm this resolve a bomb was hurled onto his plans.

"I felt sure that some day you would come back—a successful business man. I knew you would lose all those foolish old ideas about the stage and art and such like," Nora told him as they drove along a particularly inviting stretch of country road.

"Would it make any difference if I still had those ideas—couldn't you love me?" he asked her as he nervously reached out for her hand.

"It wouldn't be practical to love a man with unsettled ideas, like your old ones," she answered, withdrawing her hand from reach.

"I understand," Ted mumbled. That settled it in his mind. Nora shared the narrow thoughts of many other country people—stage and movie folk were all bad in her estimation—she could not realize that some of the finest men and women in the world were engaged in the theatrical profession.

What did it matter after that? There was only one place where Ted belonged and he went back to it—back to the Merlight studio. Let them bring on their co-stars, let them exploit has-beens under his fame. What did it matter? What did fame or success mean when the woman he loved could never be his?

Bob Leonard could not understand this morbid change in Ted. Temperamental attacks did not usually leave after-effects like that. He wondered, too, when Ted raised no further objections to Marie Sivelle. Perhaps when he met that young lady a change would come over him.

A change? Well, perhaps! The moment Ted looked up languidly to acknowledge the introduction to the actress who was to share honors with him in the forthcoming production, the change was effected.

"Nora!" he gasped, "what are you doing here?"

Certainly it was Nora. She was smiling out an explanation. "I am Marie Sivelle. I became famous on the stage because that was my ambition—and I came here to co-star with you because I knew who you were and I wanted to be near you. I was in the manager's office when you expressed the wish that my face would damage the camera. I knew you didn't know. I guessed where you would go. My sister is the teacher at that school now. That's how I arranged to substitute there for a week. I made up my mind months ago, when you first became famous, that I would be your leading lady. Please Teddy won't you let me?" There was real pleading in her request.

"Let you? Why, dear heart, you must be my leading lady for life. I want you always," he cried joyfully, as he gathered her up in his arms.

"When they fall, they fall hard," old Bob Leonard mumbled to himself, and old Bob was an authority on such things.

HOW BUTTERFLIES CROSS SEA

Delicate Creatures Suffer During Voyage, but Millions of Them Make Passage in Safety.

The most wonderful of ocean flyers are the butterflies which cross the ocean in the spring.

Naturalists tell us that one of the most amazing sights in the world is to see millions of these delicate creatures, like a cloud of tiny pieces of paper, flying across the channel from the continent to English shores, when the wind is favorable.

Their stamina and endurance are extraordinary, and although some fall exhausted into the sea, the bulk make a successful crossing. The butterfly army of invasion generally includes many beautiful specimens, and as an illustration of their powers of endurance it might be mentioned many butterflies have descended to rest on vessels 200 miles at sea.

The farthest authenticated distance at which a moth has been captured at sea was recorded by a well-known scientist eight years ago, who took specimens of a certain large moth 1,200 miles from the nearest possible land. —London Tit-Bits.

Girl's Father Bit.

"Run quick!" cried the girl to her clandestine lover. "Papa is unchaining the big bulldog he bought yesterday! The brute will tear you to bits!"

"No, he won't," said the lover calmly. "That dog is an old pet of mine. I raised him, and I hated to part with him: but I gave him to the dealer last week, with instructions to sell him to your father. Well, Bill, old chap! Glad to see me, ain't you? There, now—charge! What were you saying, darling?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The DAIRY

VALUES OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Leaders in Fight Against H. C. L. Judged From Economy and Nourishment Furnished.

Since the high cost of living is still a problem and since New York is one of the two foremost dairy states of the union, the workers in dairying and home economics at the state college at Ithaca, N. Y., are calling renewed attention to the relative cheapness and high food values of dairy products.

To eat these products is to increase the prosperity of the state and to decrease the drain on the pocketbook, because, the folks at Ithaca say, there is a double advantage to the New York housewife, from the viewpoint of economy and of nourishment, if she makes a larger use of them in the family diet.

Not only do these foods contain the growth-promoting substances needed by children, but they are among the cheapest foods of animal origin in respect to protein and lime content. Whole milk, skim-milk, cottage cheese and American cheddar, or common "store" cheese, are good, cheap foods and the workers at Cornell advocate their use.

BETTER TO KEEP GOOD BULLS

Farmer Sold Registered Holstein for $50 That Afterwards Proved to Be Worth $5,000.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When a certain farmer a few years ago sold his registered Holstein bull to his local butcher no records had been made by any of the bull's daughters. Within a year 11 of the daughters freshened at the ages of two and three. Records were then made of milk and butterfat production, and to the astonishment of everybody the average milk production was 14,502 pounds and the average butterfat production was 573 pounds.

But before these records were available the bull was dead and his hide had become leather. Because there were no records, a $5,000 bull had been sold for $50. The cow-testing association tests the dams and daughters, and the bull association makes it practicable to keep a bull until his daughters have been tested. These two associations would have saved that bull.

Registration alone cannot guarantee production. Registered dairy bulls should be backed by good production records. Without record backing they may be very well bred, but there is nothing to prove it.

COVERING FOR CREAM CANS

Great Part of Value Is Lost if Product Is Exposed to Sun While Being Hauled.

A great part of the value of keeping cream cool on the farm and at the station or creamery is lost if the cream is exposed to the direct rays of the sun while being hauled from the farm to the point of sale. Far too few people stop to realize the importance of covering their cream cans when bringing them to town. Expensive jacketed cans are not a necessity to keep the cream cool. In summer weather just an ordinary piece of wet burlap thrown over cans will keep the temperature of the cream as much as 20 degrees below what it would rise to if left uncovered while being transported over the average hauling distance.

DRYING UP COWS NEGLECTED

Some Animals Inclined to Keep Up Heavy Milk Flow Until Calving Time—Care Is Needed.

Some cows are inclined to keep up the heavy milk flow until calving time, and the dairyman is apt to neglect drying them up. Some cows dry themselves while others must be dried up by the milker. Care must be taken or the udder will be injured. The best practice is to cut off the grain feed, giving no grain at all, and in some cases giving less of other feeds. The cow should be milked only once a day for a few days, and then the period lengthened until only once in four or five days. This should be kept up until the flow has entirely ceased.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS

Talk is cheap, but it's votes that count.

All men are born illiterate and many never outgrow it.

Let a woman have her will and she'll give herself away.

LOVE FOR GOOD LIVE STOCK

Boys' and Girls' Clubs Teach Members That Cattle Raising Is Most Profitable.

The two most valuable assets for the amateur stockman to possess in order to become a successful live stock breeder are: First, an interest and incentive for raising good stock, and second, practical experience supplemented with a thorough technical knowledge of selecting, feeding, judging, and breeding, according to J. T. Tingle, of the Colorado Agricultural College, who says: "Most of our greatest like stock breeders of today entered their profession on account of their love for good stock and their practical experience enabled them to make a success of the business.

"Both theoretical training and practical experience are necessary for the best success. Especially is this true at present—a time when feed, labor, and stock are high. There has never been a time when the live stock industry demanded a more thorough knowledge of proper feeding, breeding, handling, and selecting than at present.

"The objects sought through the boys' and girls' clubs include the above essentials for success, and in addition they endeavor to teach the members that the work is enjoyable, profitable, instructive and offers an incentive for securing an agricultural education. Boys as well as men are looking for practical training and there is no better way for them to secure it than through the clubs.

"Every farmer and stockman should be more than anxious for his son to get into some kind of live stock club. He should not only advise his boy to enter a club but should encourage and urge others to join by offering prizes and stock at reasonable prices in order to promote the work and further the 'better livestock' movement. Purebred breeders can well afford to sell club members stock at reduced prices in order to build up an interest in these young stockmen for raising registered stock. Increased interest means greater demand for purebreds and the better the demand the better will be the future sales."

Authentic Incidents Related Showing What May Be Expected From Improved Methods.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The following authenticated incidents are cited by the United States department of agriculture in its "Better Sires—Better Stock" campaign to show what American farmers and stockmen may expect through improved methods of breeding and handling animals.

One Cow Equals Five.—A New Jersey boy was influenced to buy a high-grade cow for $155. The cow on freshening gave 24 quarts of milk and kept it up for a long period. The father owned five cows, the average for the neighborhood. They were fresh in the spring. Their product did not equal the product of the cow owned by the son—five times the labor and five times the feed, in comparison with one good cow.

High-Class Bully Beef.—An Oklahoma farmer had two registered Shorthorn yearling bulls that he priced at $100 each for breeding purposes. A butcher saw the bulls, asked the price, but learned that they were registered and that it would take $100 each to buy them. He bought them, killed them, and stated that they were the cheapest cattle he had bought for some time, because they cut the better kinds of beef and more of it.

Valuable Stock—Valuable Offspring.—In several counties of North Carolina more purebred live stock has been purchased during the past year at the higher prices which have prevailed than in any other year. Hogs were never so high, and yet hundreds of boys bought purebred pigs at high prices with the expectation of selling their offspring. Through the county agents many hundreds of pigs bred by the boys have been sold at good prices and this is stimulating the extension of purebred hogs.

Better Poultry—More Meat.—In a southern community, following the introduction of well-bred poultry for breeding, there was noticeable improvement in the size of the next generation of the fowls. The average weight of the birds marketed was 25 per cent greater than previously, according to the observation of an experienced poultry buyer.

Kill a truth and bury it;

Make Wars and cause woes;

Make the whole world tremble in fear and despair.

Take a tip from me—a lie is worse than a theft.

"Once a liar, always a liar."

WORDS OF WISE MEN

Avoid the ford in which your friend was drowned.—Gaelic.

It is sometimes expedient to forget what you know.—Syrus.

There is a limit when forbearance ceases to be a virtue.—Burke.

There are no points of the compass on the chart of true patriotism.

Could a man foresee events he would never be poor.—French Proverb.

All good ends can be worked out by good means. Those that cannot are bad, and may be counted so at once and left alone.

Water flows downward, but fire flows upward. Our spirits are like the fire. It is their nature to seek ever higher and higher levels. No one can be happy who is not in some way aspiring.

While we walk through the valley of youth its beauty, its variety, its dancing lights and shadows make us forget that it lies low. As we climb into middle age the road is steep, but we know that each step takes us nearer the sun.

The best things usually require the most patience for their development. A tent may be put up in an hour, but a strong and stately building calls for long and careful work. We have need of patience not only with others but also with ourselves, in the building of character into what we would have it.

A Side-Show Romance

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright, 1919, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Outside of her improvised tent Maia could hear the voices of the eager young "barker," shrill against the background of jazz music that came from the veranda beyond, and the buzzing of voices of the crowds that she could indistinctly see outlined through the canvas that hid her from the rest of the men and women, girls and boys who had assembled on the Woodmere lawn for the fete that was to raise enough money to tide over one of the local charities through the summer.

"This way to have your fortune told," went on the persistent young "barker;" "greatest gypsy in the world. Come and have your fortune told. Learn your past and know your future. This way, ladies and gentlemen."

Then another higher pitched boyish voice—the voice of the barker for a rival attraction.

"This way to see the wild animals! Greatest menagerie in the world! Largest alligator in captivity. Fiercest bear in the world! Eats 'em alive! Hugs 'em to death! This way, this way. Best show on the grounds."

And then the incessant "This way to have your fortune told. Greatest gypsy in the world. Cross her palm with silver and she'll tell you your fortune."

And still Maia sat within her close little tent, none too comfortable beneath the heavy load of chains and tawdry jewelry that embellished her costume. Moreover her hair was hanging loosely on her shoulders and the mask across her face was oppressive. But worst of all, she was sitting there in her tent wasting her time and the vocal energy of her willing young aid with the megaphone outside without having the satisfaction of taking in any money.

She wondered what she would tell the people when they did come; it didn't seem exactly easy. Still, it was all in the day's work, and if Mrs. Stanley Burton chose to keep her on at a graduate nurse's salary to idle her time away in this fashion, why it really wasn't going to disturb Maia.

For Maia had not been back from her long months of Red Cross duty in France many weeks, and even a respite such as this from the more trying sort of nursing was bringing welcome relief to overwrought nerves. She had gone to Woodmere to take charge of Bobby Barton's strained knee, but the ten-year-old Bobby had recovered rapidly.

Meanwhile Alicia Barton had flatly refused to sit in the stuffy tent telling fortunes, though she had been promised by her mother to the committee and duly advertised as one of the "side shows." As a last-minute substitute Maia, about to return to town, had been urged to stay a little longer for the purpose of taking Alicia's place. And Alicia had gone sailing and Maia had been put into the gypsy costume specially made for Alicia, and Mrs. Barton was sure if Maia kept her mask on no one would know the difference.

Meantime Bobby Barton, entirely recovered as to his strained knee and more than enthusiastic over the one who had brought comfort and diversion to his irksome days of convalescence, was continuing to "bark" outside her tent.

As minutes passed and no shadow darkened the entrance of her tent Maia was aware of a slight disappointment. Then she heard her barker:

"Greatest attraction on the grounds. Hey, why doesn't some one come and get their fortune told?" Apparently Bobby, too, was becoming discouraged.

Then through her mask Maia was aware that some one was rapidly making for the tent entrance. She felt an unexpected sense of confusion—stage fright, it seemed—and she shuffled her fortune cards nervously. She had gone into the operating room duty often with far less nervousness than this.

There was a fumbling at the tent flap, a sidewise shuffling of the feet and then a dark face was thrust inquiringly in. It wasn't an unkind face nor an especially ferocious one, and its expression was one more of inquisitiveness than anything else, but still one doesn't encounter even gentle brown bears every day and it was with difficulty that Maia changed a shrill scream of terror into a terrified, "Oh, please somebody do something. The bear!"

But somebody and a good many somebodies had done something. Bobby had seen the vanishing black legs of Bruno, dropped his megaphone and had seized the trailing rope.

"Hey, you menagerie people, your bear's loose," he called to the group of tents across the path, and before Maia had time to think just what was the wisest course of action when meeting a bear single-handed, "the menagerie" people had come, four or five of them, and had dragged off their entirely harmless and spiritless beast, who had prowled off in an unguarded moment.

But every one in that part of the Woodmere lawn had heard the commotion, and like wildfire spread the information that a ferocious bear had broken into Alicia Barton's tent, that there had been a narrow escape, that one of the young men from the menagerie tent had performed the rescue and that on the whole the affair had been very thrilling.

That seemed to turn the tide toward the gypsy's tent. For now they came eagerly, they stood in line outside, and the eager Bobby was more occupied now in timing the applicants to see that no one stayed more than five minutes than in shouting through his megaphone. And Maia, between those five-minute interviews, noticed that the tambourine in which she put the silver with which her palm was crossed was getting to look very tempting.

She rather regretted that Alicia Barton would have all the credit, for as yet her mask had not been removed and she had heard more than one remark from outside that Alicia certainly looked charming in gypsy costume.

The afternoon was almost over and Maia was beginning to feel the strain of her unaccustomed work when some one came who caused her heart to beat faster than had the inquisitive bear.

"Perhaps you had better knock off, Miss Barton," he began. "You must have had quite a fright from that beast." It was Dr. Rodney Hill—Rodney Hill, by whose side Maia had worked during those most trying days and nights in France; Rodney Hill, who, when they parted four months ago, had held Maia's hand in his own and had told Maia that she was the pluckiest girl in the world and had told her that he didn't know how he was going to get along without her. Maia had not heard from Doctor Hill again, and there were times when she had had to confess to herself that in her disappointment there was greater cause for the exhaustion she had felt during these months back in America than was the memory of all the work in France.

Maia didn't intend to take off that mask even then, but once she spoke Rodney Hill knew her and he knew it was not Alicia Barton, to whom he had been sent to give any professional aid that she might need after the bear episode, which had been getting more and more interesting as the afternoon passed.

He was holding her hand again and telling her that she was the pluckiest girl, and Bobbie had been told to give them "double time," which meant ten minutes.

"But I didn't know you were one of these people—money and society and all that sort of thing," he told her.

"And I never dreamed that you were," she said. "You never seemed like these Woodmere people or that you knew girls like Alicia Barton."

"But I'm not, and I don't," protested Rodney. "You see when I got back from France I'd rather lost my grip. I had just finished medical college when I went over, and exhausted as I was I wasn't in shape to put up the fight that would be necessary to start in on my own. Then I got in touch with these millionaire Dorkinses who wanted a resident doctor for the summer to look after old Dorkins' [illegible] and Grandma Dorkins' bad temper. Well, to tell the truth, it was because of the fat salary that went with it that I accepted it for the summer.

"I wanted to make sure I had enough to keep the pot boiling for a year and then I was going to look you up and ask you whether you'd help me to start. I wanted to tell you back there in France, that night when we left, but I knew we had both been through too much to think of ourselves then. Besides, I wanted to have a home to offer you before I asked you. Maia dear—"

"Ten minutes is up," called out the cheerful barker outside, and then, "This way to see the greatest gypsy in the world. Learn your past and know your future."

Instinct in Spiders.

Spinning webs is second nature with spiders. After they are hatched from the eggs in a cocoon they cling together for about a week. Then they separate, but their legs do not carry them very far. Facing the wind and standing on the tips of their legs, the baby spiders raise their abdomens and emit a silken thread. The faintest current wafts the gossamer in the air, and when enough is let out to permit of aerial flight the insect drifts away. When it wishes to land it hauls in the thread. Wherever it lands it can spin webs without the slightest instructions from older spiders. Older male spiders seem to lose this gift. There are about 550 species of spiders in America, but only two, the house and garden spiders, are well known.

Plume Birds Falling.

New Guinea is the home of a large percentage of the world's birds of paradise. The supply of these beautiful birds is fast failing. Not only do the women of Europe and America demand feathers for their bonnets, says the Savannah News, but the natives of New Guinea and surrounding islands make lavish use of the plumage as headdresses. Some precautions are now taken to prevent visitors to New Guinea from killing the "most beautiful birds in the world," but the natives are left alone and they continue to deck themselves out in capes and headpieces more gorgeous than any seen on our stage beauties or the wives of our millionaires.

Literal Minded.

Mrs. X. (returning home)—"Mercy! However did the child get that awful bump?" Green Girl—"You told me to let him play on the piano, and he fell off."

We are impressed that the cry of a child is the most potential alarm on the outposts of God's eternal justice.

Intention is the excavation for the erection of accomplishment. Abandoned, it leaves an unsightly hole in the surface of affairs.

After all our struggles in life, beyond the pale of cynicism, the song of the hundred children in Sabbath school will point a better way.

Even at the modern bathing beach many an old fellow will dream lovingly of the slime and leeches and frogs, and of the old hole in the creek.—J. H. Mackley in Ohio Farmer.

The groom will prove fickle if he drops anything in the room where the ceremony is held.

It is bad luck to have at the altar a person of the same given name as either of the principals.

If the bride turns her head when standing at the altar it signifies an early search for a second husband.

OUR PRICES LOWER

At Fogel's there is no need of any "Demonstration week" as in the cities now. No need, because every sale we make is a "demonstration." Again and again our customers are remarking "Why, Mr. Fogel, I find I can do better right here at home without spending time and money to visit the cities."

Only this week a customer said, "Mr. Fogel you certainly somehow manage to undersell others," and he named two different articles, one of them our fine fleece-lined undershirt of the "High Rock" make, which we sell for $1.25 while as he showed us a leading city firm advertised the very same garment for $1.50! Reason, we bought our this winter's stock of Underwear way last Spring before the last rises in cotton goods. This habit of ours of buying from several months to a year ahead, has enabled us in the constantly rising market that has characterized the past four year to sell always below prices elsewhere.

We have called attention to this fact in other advertisements a number of times, and we here urge any of our patrons who doubt the correctness of our statements, to make tests for themselves. As we have before stated, two things enable us to do this. First, this fixed rule of buying stocks several months or a year ahead of the season, and second, our fixed rule of being content with the original fair profit on our purchases without adding another profit from the subsequent rise in price of those purchases as many merchants do—these two things have made it possible for us truthfully to assert this claim of selling low. If our trade, as in the big cities, largely came from transients, it would be safe to make untruthful claims in the matter of our prices. But our patrons live right here, and we do business with them day after day, and we could not if we desired, without detection make claims of lower prices. So, we say once more, "Get prices elsewhere, cities included, and then visit us and compare them with our own for the same goods. This is certainly fair.

MILK VERY HEALTHFUL FOOD

Educational Campaign Being Conducted by Dairy Division of Department of Agriculture.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Drink more milk—a healthful food as well as drink—is the slogan advocated in an educational campaign now being conducted by the dairy division of the United States department of agriculture. Lectures, demonstrations, charts and moving pictures are being used to teach the food value of milk, and the work is carried to all classes and nationalities of people in all parts of the country. Recently in Bridgeport, Conn., two milk specialists in one day spoke before five meetings; two audiences were colored, one was Lithuanian, one Slavonic, and one Greek and American mixed—1,600 people in all.

In a certain town in Illinois a factory employing 1,400 men has recently introduced the plan of permitting milk venders to go through the plant at ten and three o'clock each day with sweet milk and buttermilk. Most of the men buy a pint each time. The foreman stated that since the drinking of milk has become so popular with the men not only is their efficiency improved but they are more contented and even tempered.

Specialists are giving lectures in many large department stores, and explain that a glass of cool milk is not only refreshing on a hot day but also furnishes a definite amount of nourishment.

In New Haven, Conn., the manager of one department store had posters made entitled, "Why We Should Drink Milk," and sold six milk tickets for 25 cents to the employees, no attempt being made to show a profit on the sales. Half-pint bottles of milk were distributed to the clerks in the middle of forenoon and afternoon. Straws were furnished with each bottle of milk, as the manager believes that too often people drink milk too fast, causing bodily discomfort.

MAJOR'S RELIEF CAME FIRST

Willing to Admit Sam Had a Grievance, but He Had Served the Longer Term.

A major in a stevedore regiment employed one of his men to take care of his horses and do little chores around the yard. One day Sam came into the major's office and he was some agitated man. After he had saluted, he exclaimed:

"Major, I want to be relieved from dis hyar job right now!"

The major asked him why he didn't want the job any more.

"Major, that job is good enuff, but I just can't seem to get along with yo' all's wife. Seems every time I goes down to that thar house she puts me to doin' all kinds of chambermaid's work, and a-naggin' at me all a ther time, too."

Then it was the major's turn. "Sam, I've been living with that woman for thirty-odd years now, and if there is going to be anyone relieved, it's going to be me."—Judge.

Not a Square Deal.

My little cousin, Bobby, five, came crying to his mother:

"I don't like the little boy next door; he hit me."

"Well," said his mother, "I wouldn't cry. Why didn't you hit him back?"

Bobby thought for a moment, then said:

"I did," and went away still sobbing. In a few minutes he was back.

"But, mother—"

"Yes, Bobby?"

"When he hit me, he hit me, and when I hit him, I missed him."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Why Teddy Left.

As the Sunday school teacher was entering the classroom she saw a little girl and her small brother leaving in great haste.

"Why, Anna," she exclaimed in surprise, "you aren't going home?"

"Please, Miss Jones, we've got to go," said Anna, in distress; "Freddie's swallowed his collection."

Munchausen Outclassed.

"I suppose you meet a great many eccentric characters in Washington."

"Oh, yes. You can hardly believe the stories you hear about some of those persons."

"No?"

"I was once introduced to a man who was said to read every issue of the Congressional Record from cover to cover."

Round Towers in the West.

Those who venture into the West of the United States in these days are often puzzled by the number of round towers that at times throw very lengthy shadows across the landscape. There is always more or less guessing at the windows of passenger coaches as to the name and purpose of these structures. Most of them have greater circumference, and some seem to have greater height than the famous round towers of Ireland. They are silos, so called because they are employed for the preservation of ensilage or fodder crops at their green stage. There are possibilities in barn and silo combinations which will some day, we believe, be developed by the skillful architect. Even now departures from the crude and conventional are visible in many parts of the Indian corn belt.

London's Ugliest Church.

Charing Cross is by common consent London's ugliest bridge; do you know which is her ugliest church? It dominates Smith's square, Westminster, and Canon Wilberforce was vicar for many years. The story of its origin is that Queen Anne wanted a church built hereabout and ordered an architect to prepare the design. When the plans were brought for her approval she disliked them so much that she tore them into shreds, threw them at the artist's head, and kicked over a footstool in her rage. "There," she said, pointing to the overturned footstool, "build me a church like that." The terrified man took her at her word, and the result we see.—London
